Engineering night proves learning works

By BRIGIT MCCALLUM
brigit@waterbororeporter.com

LearningWorks is a new afterschool program at Waterboro Elementary School. Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 10 the school gym was the site where 92 students and their parents gathered for the first LearningWorks Family Engineering Night. Parents and children were welcomed by Program Director Aimee Moody, then, with the assistance of program staff, they all moved through eight stations to face engineering puzzles related to some of the challenges involved in building bridges. Jennifer Daigle, watching her daughter Candice reading the directions for the challenge, spoke of her misgivings when she first heard of the after school program. "I was concerned that I'd lose after school time with her, but she is so happy, and I am so happy with all she's learning; it's really worth it."

Jason Silva watched his youngest daughter Isabella engage with her group in seeing how far out over a book they could balance dominoes, and said, "She's our youngest, and her sister and brother have their own 'things.' This is her thing. She loves it and we love the science she's learning."

Valerie Dukhey's daughters, Lana and Maya, were busy with their group, seeing how many erasers they could balance on a paper arch before it collapsed. Dukhey had anticipated that the girls would be exhausted when their new school day finished at 5:30 this year, but was surprised that they came home energized. "It's the days the program doesn't run that they arrive home grumpy!"

LearningWorks provides free education programs that serve students in grades two through five at eleven schools in Biddford, Portland, South Portland, and now Waterboro. Waterboro's LearningWorks site began operation last summer, with a five-week Summer School program attended by 38 students, and around 40 students are currently involved in the after school program.

LearningWorks is a Portland-based non-profit that receives federal funding. The 21st Century Community Learning

Andrew Roberts' career in crime

Bruce Tucker had traced the busy career of Andy Roberts in money laundering, counterfeiting and even burglary and revealed the details during the Sept. 17 meeting of the Alfred Historical Society. He noted Andy, a local boy, had first requested to exchange bank notes for currency in the small Alfred Bank, and Stimson, who was minding the bank, thought nothing of it. Andy Roberts and his brother ran a saloon in New York City – it appeared to Stimson the saloon was simply doing well. Andy got his money.

Later a man named Baker came in with Roberts' brother, Charles. Baker was involved in horse trading, had a large roll of bills but needed smaller currency to pay farmers for horses. That day McIntyre was tending the bank. He provided the money.

But when two men came into the bank interested in the previous visitors and their Atlantic Bank notes, things took a different turn. They wanted an identification of Baker. One of them, Alvin Adams, was the founder of the Adams Express Company. He invited McIntyre to NYC where his bank visitors were found at a race track. Andy Roberts was also there. McIntyre made the identification, then left for home.

Roberts and a cohort named Kinney had bigger plans. Andy had his eye on the safes kept in a compartment in the train luggage car. He felt a safe could be rolled out the luggage car door with little suspicion when the circumstances were right. It appeared to be a good plan but it took awhile.

Baggage master Stebbins would help by pitching the safe out the door.

It took a long time for the right conditions but they were finally able to pull it off. Andy had brought his safe-cracking tools along in a picnic basket. He was able to empty the safe and bury the loot.

The detectives worked on Stebbins who finally confessed that Andy and his brother were guilty of altering bank notes. When they searched the house the copper plates and other paraphernalia needed for counterfeiting were found. Tucker found the whole story in the New York Times, Nov. 1, 1860.

It was learned the brothers owned the Capital Saloon, famous for its counterfeiting and forgery crowd. Who would convict the brothers? The railroad detectives wanted them for the theft of the safe and New York wanted them for forgery and counterfeiting. A large crowd attended the trial; charges against Andy's brother were dropped and Andy seems to have slipped through the cracks. But when free again he continued what he did best – forgery and counterfeiting. The trail of his activities grew murky and thick with other thieves and counterfeiters. He did manage to stay just ahead of the law...in most instances.

Sanford Mills viewed

When the New Century Club was invited to view Harland Eastman's art collection, the most impressive piece was an overview of the Sanford Mills. The large (20" BY 62") watercolor hangs in his upstairs hallway and dwarfs everything else. It was done by E.R.Howe and even includes Botley Pond which is no more because it disappeared when a dam was removed. The painting hung in the mills office for over 50 years.

When Eastman heard it would be up for auction he wasted no time in bidding on the piece which would be too large for most homes. Its impressive size gives a birds'eye view of the mills and inspired the postmaster to have copies made which were quite popular for many years.

Members of the club were given a tour of the home and viewed paintings which the Eastmans had collected. In many instances they were fortunate in being able to purchase them before the artists became better known. He began his talk by showing a photo of a desk made by Shaker John Vance. Alfred Postmaster George Williams, realizing its significance traded for it, giving a rolltop desk in return. Years later Alice Emery sold it to a collector for $500. Today it would be worth much more.

County Republicans meet

The York County Republicans met in Town Hall Nov. 11, many of them toting toys which will be packaged for Toys for Tots. Nancy Ford was the instigator of the project, which has been repeated in the past few years.

Guests at the meeting were Senator Woodsome, Rep. Don Marean and Rep. Johnathan Kenney, each of whom spoke to the gathering.

Elected to office during the meeting were Mike Quatrano of Saco as parliamentarian and Jake Stoddard of Buxton as finance chairman.

Village notes

The next acoustic country jam in the Legion Hall will be Dec. 12 from 12 to 3:30.

The Christmas tree in Town Hall now is labeled with the ages of youngsters who will need Christmas gifts and whether boy or girl. Generous townspeople are invited to take a label.

POLICE NOTES

FROM THE YORK COUNTY SHERIFF'S OFFICE

Hit and run on West Road

At 5:22 PM on Nov. 17 the York County Sheriff's Office responded to a hit and run pedestrian crash in the vicinity of 986 West Road in Waterboro.

When deputies arrived, they found Bruce Weagle, 69, of Waterboro had been struck by a pick up truck that continued without stopping.

Weagle explained that his two-year-old Golden Retriever "Tobie" had run off and he went searching for him. Weagle found Tobie wandering in the vicinity of the 900 block of West Road, a section that is hilly and dark. After retrieving the dog, Weagle was returning to his parked vehicle, walking with the flow of traffic on West Road when he noticed a pick up truck approaching. Since he was wearing dark clothing and it was dark, he waved his arms to make his presence known but the truck did not deter from its route and the truck's passenger side mirror struck Weagle's left hand. The impact caused part of the black plastic mirror to break off. The vehicle continued northerly toward Ross Corner Road without stopping.

Weagle suffered bruises and lost feeling momentarily in his left hand. He was treated and released at Southern Maine Medical Center in Sanford.

The truck appeared to be a full size red pick up, brand unknown. Mr. Weagle does not recall any identifying features. The sheriff's office asks anybody with information to please contact the sheriff's office at 324-1113 or contact Deputy Travis Belleard at TCbelleard@co.york.me.us

Inappropriate handling of funds

American Legion Post #55 in Limerick recently contacted the York County Sheriff's Office because some members suspected improprieties with the Post's finances over the past year.

After a 3 month investigation conducted by Sergeant Matt Nadeau, it was determined that approximately $1900 of the Post's money was diverted into the personal bank account of the Post's Treasurer, John Butler, 69, of Acton.

Today, deputies summoned Butler for theft by unauthorized taking, a Class C Crime. Butler is scheduled to appear in Alfred Superior Court on Feb. 15, 2016.

John Butler

Darren Cyr and detectives from the York County Sheriff's Office launched an investigation and determined that the child was in the care of Barren Foster Tracey, his uncle, when the injuries occurred.

The baby spent three days recovering in the Barbara Bush Wing at Maine Medical Center. He is now in the care of foster parents.

After an investigation and an examination of the injuries, Deputy Cyr obtained a warrant for Tracey's arrest. On Wednesday, Nov. 18, Cyr and other deputies arrested Tracey, 33, for Aggravated Assault, a Class B Felony. Tracey faces up to 10 years imprisonment if convicted.

Tracey lists no permanent address but formerly lived at the Pinewood Apartments on Howe Street in Parsonsfield.

Tracey will appear via video arraignment on Friday, Nov. 20. He is currently incarcerated with bail set at $25,000 cash.

Alleged child abuse in Parsonsfield

On Friday, Nov. 13, York County Sheriff's Deputies received information from the State of Maine, Department of Health and Human Services that an 18-month-old boy, from Parsonsfield, was admitted to the hospital with significant head trauma and internal injuries. DHHS workers suspected child abuse and contacted the sheriff's office. Parsonsfield Contract Deputy

Moose killed by car

On Nov. 9 at around 6 p.m., York County Sheriff's Deputies responded to a vehicle that had hit a moose in the 300 block of Sokokis Trail. Limerick Fire and Rescue also responded.

The driver, Glenn Googins, 48 years old of Cornish was transported to Maine Medical Center hospital with non-life threatening injuries. Googins was treated and released for cuts and bruises and a concussion. The vehicle was totaled.

The moose was killed. The sheriff's office reminds everybody to be mindful of wild-life movement, especially during this time of year.

Fire damages home in Alfred

BY ALLISON WILLIAMS

Twelve fire trucks and untold gallons of water weren't enough to stop the flames from doing major damage to the old house on Back Road belonging to Larry and Peggy Greer.

The cause is still being investigated; it began on the second floor porch and spread rapidly. The upper story was rented to a couple with a baby and a small youngster; all of whom managed to escape safely.

The Greens think the building was built in the 1830's. When Larry did some work on the chimney he found an old newspaper and note left by former resident George Came, who also had worked on the chimney and mentioned leaving the noted in his journal. Both the old newspaper and the note were rescued by Larry.

The Greens believe they will be supplied with a trailer for living quarters until the home is rebuilt.

LYMAN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL NEWS

Veterans visit school

Richard Farrington, retired Air Force Staff Sergeant who served in more than one war and spent more than 22 years in the service of our country, visited the students in the second, third, and fifth grades at Lyman Elementary in observance of Veterans' Day. Sgt. Farrington is the father of LES fifth-grade teacher, Susan Richards and the grandfather of 2nd grader, Mikaela Richards in Mrs. Walsh's class.

Farrington served in more than one war and spent 22 years in the service of our country. He talked about the meaning of Veterans' Day and explained that Memorial Day honors all those military persons who have passed on, while Veterans' Day acknowledges all of the living and dead who have defended our freedom.

While on his way to to the school Sgt. Farrington stopped in the Milk Room in Waterboro to pick up his lunch. A woman went up to him to thank him for his service. He was wearing his uniform. How many of us could fit into into clothes that we wore so many years ago? Sgt. Farrington responded by saying "No problem, my pleasure." When he went up to the counter to pay for his lunch he was told that the woman had already paid for it. He told the children, "I am a grown man and that brought tears to my eyes. I never got a chance to thank her." Hopefully, she will read this article.

Melissa Theriault E8 in the Air Force also visited Lyman Elementary to observe Veteran's Day. Theriault is the mother of Ava and Amelia Theriault. She went to both fifth grades and compared the differences between Sgt. Farrington's uniform and hers. She was wearing a work uniform which is a camouflage and Farrington was wearing a dress uniform. She pointed out that over time the colors of the Air Force uniform has changed.

Theriault has been in the service for 19 years and now works in New Hampshire on computers. She joined the Air Force at the age of 18 and said that she wanted to see the world and meet interesting people. She has done just that. Theriault gave the children signed pictures from a pilot whose plane was being serviced while in the air! She also taught the students how to stand at attention. The kids loved it.

Peer helpers

Kids helping kids is very much evident at Lyman Elementary. Twenty five students have signed up to be Peer Helpers under the supervision of the Guidance Counselor, Jackie Chaplin. Ms. Chaplin initiated this program last year and is busy expanding it this year (her second year at Lyman). Among their many ways of reaching out to help is a Thanksgiving Food Drive that will benefit the York County Shelter. The group is working on a play based on bullying to be presented to the rest of the school during Care Time. They are also hoping to spread holiday cheer by collecting new clothes, books, and toys for local children in need. Ornaments will be placed on the Giving Tree with the gender of the child and the item to be purchased. This tree is on display in the lobby. Parents and friends are welcome to purchase a gift that is suggested on the ornament and take the unwrapped item with the ornament to school by Friday, Dec. 11. People are encouraged to let Mrs. Chaplin or Principal, Ginnie Drouin if they know of any family who may need a little help this season. Names will be kept confidential. Only the gender and item to be purchased will be placed on the ornament. Wrapping paper donations will be accepted.

The Peer Helpers have also made Birthday cards for all of the children in the school. They help the Kindergarten and First Grade teachers in the morning and afternoons with their arrival and dismissal routines, and assist the younger students signing in to their computers during their lab times. Along with that, the Peer Helpers work with the students in the first two grades to learn their sight words. They act as positive role models to the whole school and out in the community. The Peer Helpers also lend a hand to the custodians by collecting the recycling around the building, returning lunch trays and washing tables between the lunches.

Their next agenda will be decided on by the children themselves during a Brainstorming meeting.

Walkathon wrap up

The recent walk-a-thon made $3,535, a tribute to parents and friends who supported this cause.

LEARNING WORKS

Centers (21st CCLC) initiative is the only federal funding source dedicated exclusively to after-school programs. The No Child Left Behind Act reauthorized 21st CCLC in 2002, transferring the administration of the grants from the U.S. Department of Education to state education agencies. Each state receives funds based on its share of Title I funding for low-income students. Grants support afterschool programs that provide services to students.

Vice Principal Melissa Roberts came to Waterboro after teaching in two Portland schools, first at East End Community School on Munjoy Hill and then at the Ocean Ave. School. Each had a LearningWorks program. Believing Waterboro Elementary could benefit from the program, she reached out to the Portland-based LearningWorks CCLC last year, to see if Waterboro might qualify as a LearningWorks site. Because of the size of the school the number of students falling a bit short of state standards grades, and the number receiving free or reduced lunch, Waterboro was offered the opportunity to become a LearningWorks site quite different from the primarily urban sites already in operation. Roberts knew that to get the program rolling parent involvement and input would be key, and she was pleasantly surprised, "When their students were invited to participate, the parents were really on board, to advise and be active, so we were sure it could work."

The goal of the WES After-School program is to serve 50 students, and students are invited through teacher referrals, especially students who are almost at state standards level in grades, but students who are above and below are also invited, as improvement is the major goal of the program. Waterboro Elementary is the only school in RSU 57 to be eligible for the program, because it is the only one with a student body large enough to qualify, in addition to the other factors.

LearningWorks' after school and summer programs are available at no cost to families. Transportation and healthy snacks are also included. The underlying belief articulated by the federal program that is administered at each state's level is that "Success in school equals success in life."

The programs follow the same model in all eleven of the southern Maine schools currently in the program, so that resources can be shared across all the programs. Last year over 800 students were served in the summer and after-school programs. The goal is to bring students to meet state standards, through providing them a chance to master the basics and explore new experiences after school. Teachers take the best of the school day and add hands-on enrichment activities to foster increased academic confidence for participants.

Students are exposed to free activities they might not encounter without the program, like Mad Science, in addition to a Boston Museum curriculum that is engaging students in designing bridges as part of a hands-on project-based learning experience. The basic curriculum includes STEM activities of science, technology, engineering and math. This has now become STEAM, however, with the inclusion of arts in the curriculum.

The program runs Monday through Thursday each week, and begins after school with a healthy snack, followed by physical activity and STEAM-related activities. Then it's time for enrichment activities through age-appropriate clubs. Presently there is an outdoors club, computer coding club and a cards club. Staff is looking forward to the creation of a karate club as well.

Staff is constantly creating opportunities to travel through the use of technology. In a recent lesson on transportation, because they did not have the resources to travel to the Portland Jetport, they Skyped with an airline pilot who provided a virtual tour of the cockpit of an airplane and then mailed pilot wings and aeronautical maps to the students. Staffing is composed of RSU 57 teachers and Ed. Techs, plus two bus drivers. So this grant has provided part time work for more than ten local workers.

The summer program partnered with the Title 1 and the local Parks and Rec. summer camps, and the afterschool program is partnered with the school, with the director, Aimee Moody, holding weekly meetings with administration, to be part of the whole school community. The program is looking for community partnerships, especially in the area of arts, health and wellness and multiculturalism. Community members with knowledge and experience are welcome to volunteer with students to share and continue to broaden the curriculum.

Moody, a 2013 University of Maine at Farmington graduate who majored in Community Health Education, directs the Waterboro programs. Following graduation, Moody interned in a 21st Century grant funded after-school program, and was hired as the first Waterboro director. Moody is living in Hollis and works full-time at WES.

"There have been a few bumps on the road as we began, but we are moving along well now. We have a strong staff that keeps track of student progress, and are already getting good feedback from classroom teachers on participants' improved grades, and behavior." She has heard from teachers that participants are working better in groups, and showing improved critical thinking and problem-solving skills.

"We're pretty happy. And we were amazed at the turnout for the Family Engineering Night! Four o'clock is a funny time and we didn't know what to expect, but to have 45 parents, both moms and dads, show up was great!"

Risti secured a match-winning pin after just 1:25 on the mat against rival Bridgewater State University. The Huskies trailed the Bears 24-19 with just Risti's match remaining. The rookie pulled off the stunner with a pin of senior Casey Endelin to give USM a 25-24 victory. Maine railways to receive $20 million investment

U.S. Senator Susan Collins, the Chairman of the Transportation, Housing, and Urban Development (THUD) Appropriations Subcommittee, announced that the Department of Transportation will award the Maine Railways Project $20 million in funding through the successful Transportation Investment Generating Economic Recovery (TIGER) grant program.

The Secretary of Transportation, Anthony Foxx, called Senator Collins this morning to notify her of the grant award.

"I am very pleased to announce that the State of Maine will receive a $20 million investment in the Maine Railways Project through the TIGER grant program. This important investment will help to rebuild and upgrade our state's railway system, create jobs in Maine, and provide increased public safety for our communities," said Sen. Collins.

"Once again, I applaud the effort of Sen. Susan Collins' commitment to Maine's transportation needs. This TIGER Grant is crucial as it will improve the accessibility and long-term prospects for the economy of the state through freight rail by allowing the improved movement of goods both in and out of Maine," said Maine Department of Transportation Commissioner, David Bernhardt.

The TIGER program was established in 2009 to provide federal assistance for vital transportation projects. Senator Collins has worked to ensure that the program has been funded every single year since it was first established. Over the last six years, Senator Collins has been able to successfully secure more than $90 million through the TIGER program for key projects throughout the state of Maine, including the replacements of bridges in Kittery, Dresden-Richmond, and Rumford, and the breakwater in Eastport. With the addition of today's announcement, Maine will receive more than $110 million for highway, bridge, port, and rail projects through the TIGER program.

"One of my highest priorities as Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Transportation, Housing and Urban Development has been to help ensure that our nation's vital transportation infrastructure does not fall into disrepair. I have seen first-hand how critically important TIGER grants have been to economic growth, infrastructure repairs, and many bridge and port projects across Maine that may not have otherwise been built," said Senator Collins.

The Maine Regional Railways Project provides investment in new rail, ties, surfacing, and upgraded road crossings and signal systems on the railroad mainlines in the state. The project will rehabilitate approximately 380 miles of track throughout Maine, removing longstanding bottlenecks and creating faster and more reliable freight service. The TIGER funding will support 54% of the total project cost of $37,348,516.

Buxton officials care about the community

The Town of Buxton together with the Buxton Police Department and its dispatch division, held its fifth annual Community Cares Thanksgiving dinner, on Nov. 17. Community Cares was established as far back as 1979 in the State of Illinois and last month found its way into the Affordable Health Care Act as part of a Bill passed by Congress. While Law Enforcement Agencies had little to do with the passage of such a Bill, Community Cares begins and ends with many local police departments.

In the Town of Buxton, the Buxton Police Department headed by Chief Mike Grovo, offers the elderly an opportunity to become a part of the program by volunteering such pertinent information as the address in which they reside and a phone number to the residence. Every morning at nine O'clock, the dispatch unit, headed by Katherine Mullen, places a call to each resident who has not yet called in. Those who do not connect with the Police Department are dispatched an officer to make sure the participant is okay.

Some do forget to call but others, like Annalease Bonner are only too happy to pick up the phone and let authorities know she is all right. Ms. Bonner who is well into her 80's and originally from Germany says, "Community Cares means a great deal to me. My husband and I always dreamed of living in Maine. We came here over 50 years ago. I have lived most of my life right here in Buxton. My husband is gone now. I have no children. Everyday the Buxton Police Department reaches out to me. We talk. We laugh. These are very caring people and this is a wonderful thing, not to feel so alone."

Judging from the crowd at the Fifth Annual Community Cares Thanksgiving dinner, the relationship between police and the community seems more like something you would find at a wedding reception. The town hall hosted nearly 50 people, enjoying a Thanksgiving feast fit for kings and queens. Desserts featured homemade brownies, a chocolate peanut butter cake and a wide assortment of cookies. Tender turkey and sweet potato were the highlights surrounded by the usual sides defining the holiday coming upon us.

One woman who wished not to be named also praised the police department and the Community Cares program. "It's not easy getting old. It's comforting to know someone is checking in on you."

The festivities lasted a little over two hours and the volunteers serving the Buxton fire and EMS teams, as well as officers from the Buxton Police Department, availed themselves to take home their Community Care members. You could feel the warmth shared between the department and its elders. The men and women who wear the uniform do so for the greater good of society. Sometimes we find that too easy to forget.

Wreath and Tree Shippers Should Be Aware of Out-of-State Plant Regulations

State officials offer helpful advice

Maine residents and businesses sending trees, wreaths, or other decorative plant material around the country this holiday season can save money and lost products by noting important plant health regulations enforced by other states, according to the Maine Department of Agriculture, Conservation and Forestry (DACF).

"Shippers should be aware of the many state laws and regulations regarding the movement of plants and forest products," warned Ann Gibbs, Division of Animal and Plant Health director. "Many states closely monitor shipments to prevent infestation by invasive insects and the spread of plant diseases. Planning ahead benefits Maine shippers by speeding along deliveries in this time-sensitive industry."

DACF staff offer wreath and tree shippers the following advice:

- Import regulations can vary from state to state; shippers should check destination state regulations before sending plant material.

- Carefully inspect plant material before packaging, especially shipments headed to California, to make sure they are free of insects such as scales, or other pest damage.

- Clearly label packages containing holiday plant material, beginning with the statement, "Grown in Maine," followed by the county of origin and the name and address of the shipper.

- Labels should also indicate the contents of packages, including the different types of greenery, nuts, fruits and cones used to decorate wreaths.

"Import requirements for cut trees, wreaths with ornamental nuts and fruit arrangements exist to protect regional agriculture and natural resources from the risk of plant pests," Gibbs explained. "An insect or plant disease that is native and naturally occurring in Maine could potentially be non-native and invasive in other states. Unfortunately, despite the quality of Maine products, some shippers have learned about these regulations the hard way and have had shipments delayed, impounded or destroyed. We want to prevent any losses by getting the word out now."

An informational sheet, "Know State Regulations When shipping Wreaths and Trees," is available on the web at www.maine.gov/dacf/php/horticulture/wreaths.shtml.

Shippers with questions can call 287-3891 or email sarah.h.scally@maine.gov.
